

I've come to understand (and believe) over the years that most things in life are quite simple. In many ways, it comes down to a "yes" or a "no" - which is oftentimes defined merely by how important something is to our survival - or our success.

It's the ability to see the simplicity for what it is - and to avoid complicating the issues - that is the essence of our daily life.